Located on Colorado’s Front Range, the city of Fort Collins has a population of 155,000 and is regularly listed as one of the top places to live in the United States. Old Town Fort Collins boasts a thriving cultural scene featuring music, art, independent film, great local cuisine, and some of the best micro-breweries in the nation. Its 315+ miles of bike routes and trails make navigating the city a breeze, and outdoor enthusiasts can hike, mountain bike, ski, kayak, and rock climb in the beautiful Rocky Mountains. With the Poudre Canyon right next door and Denver an hour’s drive away, you will never be lacking for ways to unwind.

QUESTIONS?

Director of Graduate Studies: Dr. Karen Anderson • karen.anderson@colostate.edu

COMMUNICATION STUDIES

1783 Campus Delivery • Colorado State University • Fort Collins, CO 80523-1783

COMMUNICATIONSTUDIES.COLOSTATE.EDU
Located on Colorado’s Front Range, the city of Fort Collins has a population of 155,000 and is regularly listed as one of the top places to live in the United States. Old Town Fort Collins boasts a thriving cultural scene featuring music, art, independent film, great local cuisine, and some of the best micro-breweries in the nation. Its 315+ miles of bike routes and trails make navigating the city a breeze, and outdoor enthusiasts can hike, mountain bike, ski, kayak, and even climb on the beautiful Rocky Mountains. With the Poudre Canyon right next door and Denver an hour’s drive away, you will never be lacking for ways to unwind.

"THE M.A. PROGRAM WAS AND REMAINS AMAZING. THE FACULTY GOT MORE OUT OF ME THAN I THOUGHT WAS POSSIBLE, AND MY PEERS WERE ABSOLUTELY TOP-RATE. IT’S ALSO A VERY NURTURING AND FUN PLACE."

– BILL HERMAN, M.A., ’02

QUESTIONS?

Director of Graduate Studies: Dr. Karen Anderson • karen.anderson@colostate.edu

COMMUNICATION STUDIES
1783 Campus Delivery • Colorado State University • Fort Collins, CO 80523-1783

COMMUNICATIONSTUDIES.COLOSTATE.EDU
Communication Studies

“CSU’S FACULTY EXCEL IN TRANSFORMING BODIES AROUND A TABLE INTO SCHOLARS DEBATING TOUGH IDEAS... THE REMARKABLE CONSISTENCY, RIGOR, AND INDIVIDUALIZED ATTENTION AT THE M.A. LEVEL CSU OFFERS MAKES RECOMMENDING THEM AN EASY CHOICE.”

– GEORGE F. MCHENDRY, JR., M.A., ’08

GRADUATE PROGRAMS

We offer two graduate degrees: an M.A. in Communication, and an M.A. in Communication with a Specialization in Deliberative Practices. Students in both tracks complete the same core classes, deliver a departmental research colloquium, and submit a research paper to a scholarly conference.

DEVELOPING SCHOLARS, TEACHERS, AND PROFESSIONALS

Earning an M.A. in Communication from Colorado State University is transformative.

• You will receive individual mentoring from faculty to help develop you as a researcher and writer.
• Along with a competitive nine-month stipend and tuition remission, Graduate Teaching Assistants receive extensive training in communication instruction and teach their own sections of SPCM 100 – Public Speaking.
• Graduates go on to succeed at the nation’s top Ph.D. programs and those wanting a career beyond academe find limitless opportunities. Our alumni work in a wide range of public and private sector careers, such as event planning, public relations, political consulting, lobbying, broadcasting, media production, sports management, trial consulting, ministry, deliberative facilitation, and many more.

AREAS OF SPECIALIZATION

Our curriculum allows maximum flexibility. You will take core and elective courses in three areas of study, and your overall plan of study is based on your unique professional goals.

Rhetoric and Civic Engagement
• Classical and contemporary rhetorical theory, rhetorical criticism, public address, political communication, feminist rhetorical theory, and public deliberation

Relational and Organizational Communication
• Communication theory, interpersonal, organizational, international, and intercultural communication, and qualitative and quantitative research methods

Media and Visual Culture
• Film and television theory and criticism, media industries, media texts, global media, and international film and television.

FACULTY

Our faculty is comprised of award-winning scholars and teachers who enthusiastically mentor our graduate students. The list of their groundbreaking and transformative research and practice is extensive: communication and bullying in schools; organizational learning and training in emergency response settings; the social impact of human rights cinema; gender and political culture; community responses to technological changes in African villages; film and television as mediators of cultural difference; memory and materiality in the built environment; deliberative techniques addressing difficult public problems; and, humor and satire in public culture. View faculty bios, CVs, and recent publications on our website.
Communication Studies

“CSU’S FACULTY EXCEL IN TRANSFORMING BODIES AROUND A TABLE INTO SCHOLARS DEBATING TOUGH IDEAS… THE REMARKABLE CONSISTENCY, RIGOR, AND INDIVIDUALIZED ATTENTION AT THE M.A. LEVEL CSU OFFERS MAKES RECOMMENDING THEM AN EASY CHOICE.”

– GEORGE F. McHENDRY, JR., M.A., ’08

GRADUATE PROGRAMS

We offer two graduate degrees: an M.A. in Communication, and an M.A. in Communication with a Specialization in Deliberative Practices. Students in both tracks complete the same core classes, deliver a departmental research colloquium, and submit a research paper to a scholarly conference.

Students pursuing the M.A. in Communication complete a master’s thesis while students in the Deliberative Practices Specialization complete an applied research project. Both degrees can be completed in four, full-time semesters.

Coursework requirements are outlined on our website.

DEVELOPING SCHOLARS, TEACHERS, AND PROFESSIONALS

Earning an M.A. in Communication from Colorado State University is transformative.

• You will receive individual mentoring from faculty to help develop you as a researcher and writer.
• Along with a competitive nine-month stipend and tuition remission, Graduate Teaching Assistants receive extensive training in communication instruction and teach their own sections of SPCM 100 – Public Speaking.
• Graduates go on to succeed at the nation’s top Ph.D. programs and those wanting a career beyond academe find limitless opportunities. Our alumni work in a wide range of public and private sector careers, such as event planning, public relations, political consulting, lobbying, broadcasting, media production, sports management, trial consulting, ministry, deliberative facilitation, and many more.

AREAS OF SPECIALIZATION

Our curriculum allows maximum flexibility. You will take core and elective courses in three areas of study, and your overall plan of study is based on your unique professional goals.

Rhetoric and Civic Engagement
• Classical and contemporary rhetorical theory, rhetorical criticism, public address, political communication, feminist rhetorical theory, and public deliberation

Relational and Organizational Communication
• Communication theory, interpersonal, organizational, international, and intercultural communication, and qualitative and quantitative research methods

Media and Visual Culture
• Film and television theory and criticism, media industries, media texts, global media, and international film and television.

FACULTY

Our faculty is comprised of award-winning scholars and teachers who enthusiastically mentor our graduate students. The list of their groundbreaking and transformative research and practice is extensive: communication and bullying in schools; organizational learning and training in emergency response settings; the social impact of human rights cinema; gender and political culture; community responses to technological change in African villages; film and television as mediators of cultural difference; memory and materiality in the built environment; deliberative techniques addressing difficult public problems; and, humor and satire in public culture. View faculty bios, CVs, and recent publications on our website.

2014 Outstanding Master’s Degree Program Award
Master’s Education Section, National Communication Association

“THE M.A. LEVEL CSU OFFERS MAKES RECOMMENDING THEM AN EASY CHOICE.”

– GEORGE F. McHENDRY, JR., M.A., ’08
Communication Studies

“CSU’S FACULTY EXCEL IN TRANSFORMING BODIES AROUND A TABLE INTO SCHOLARS DEBATING TOUGH IDEAS… THE REMARKABLE CONSISTENCY, RIGOR, AND INDIVIDUALIZED ATTENTION AT THE M.A. LEVEL CSU OFFERS MAKES RECOMMENDING THEM AN EASY CHOICE.” – GEORGE F. MCHENDRY, JR., M.A., ’08

GRADUATE PROGRAMS

We offer two graduate degrees: an M.A. in Communication, and an M.A. in Communication with a Specialization in Deliberative Practice. Students in both tracks complete the same core classes, deliver a departmental research colloquium, and submit a research paper to a scholarly conference.

Students pursuing the M.A. in Communication complete a master’s thesis while students in the Deliberative Practice Specialization complete an applied research project. Both degrees can be completed in four, full-time semesters.

Coursework requirements are outlined on our website.

DEVELOPING SCHOLARS, TEACHERS, AND PROFESSIONALS

Earning an M.A. in Communication from Colorado State University is transformative.

• You will receive individual mentoring from faculty to help develop you as a researcher and writer.
• Along with a competitive nine-month stipend and tuition remission, Graduate Teaching Assistants receive extensive training in communication instruction and teach their own sections of SPCM 200 – Public Speaking.
• Graduates go on to succeed at the nation’s top Ph.D. programs and those wanting a career beyond academe find limitless opportunities. Our alumni work in a wide range of public and private sector careers, such as event planning, public relations, political consulting, lobbying, broadcasting, media production, sports management, trial consulting, ministry, deliberative facilitation, and many more.

AREAS OF SPECIALIZATION

Our curriculum allows maximum flexibility. You will take core and elective courses in three areas of study, and your overall plan of study is based on your unique professional goals.

Rhetoric and Civic Engagement
• Classical and contemporary rhetorical theory, rhetorical criticism, public address, political communication, feminist rhetorical theory, and public deliberation

Relational and Organizational Communication
• Communication theory, interpersonal, organizational, international, and intercultural communication, and qualitative and quantitative research methods

Media and Visual Culture
• Film and television theory and criticism, media industries, media texts, global media, and international film and television.

FACULTY

Our faculty is comprised of award-winning scholars and teachers who enthusiastically mentor our graduate students. The list of their groundbreaking and transformative research and practice is extensive: communication and bullying in schools; organizational learning and training in emergency response settings; the social impact of human rights cinema; gender and political culture; community responses to technological changes in African villages; film and television as mediators of cultural difference; memory and materiality in the built environment; deliberative techniques addressing difficult public problems; and, humor and satire in public culture. View faculty bios, CVs, and recent publications on our website.

2014 Outstanding Master’s Degree Program Award
Master’s Education Section, National Communication Association

“TRANSFORMATIVE STUDY”
Located on Colorado’s Front Range, the city of Fort Collins has a population of 155,000 and is regularly listed as one of the top places to live in the United States. Old Town Fort Collins boasts a thriving cultural scene featuring music, art, independent film, great local cuisine, and some of the best micro-breweries in the nation. Its 315+ miles of bike routes and trails make navigating the city a breeze, and outdoor enthusiasts can hike, mountain bike, ski, kayak, and rock climb in the beautiful Rocky Mountains. With the Poudre Canyon right next door and Denver an hour’s drive away, you will never be lacking for ways to unwind.

“THE M.A. PROGRAM WAS AND REMAINS AMAZING. THE FACULTY GOT MORE OUT OF ME THAN I THOUGHT WAS POSSIBLE, AND MY PEERS WERE ABSOLUTELY TOP-RATE. IT’S ALSO A VERY NURTURING AND FUN PLACE.”

– BILL HERMAN, M.A., ’02

QUESTIONS?
Director of Graduate Studies: Dr. Karen Anderman • karen.anderman@colostate.edu

COMMUNICATION STUDIES
1783 Campus Delivery • Colorado State University • Fort Collins, CO 80523-1783

COMMUNICATIONSTUDIES.COLOSTATE.EDU

GRADUATE STUDIES IN COMMUNICATION